Falling down the rabbit hole:

As the sun beamed down, Alice wearily lied down. Observantly Alice noticed a little white rabbit dressed smartly with a red velvet waistcoat and a shimmering gold pocket watch. Hastily the rabbit ran into a hole closely followed by Alice. After plunging into the abyss, Alice noticed some queer objects. Mirrors, tables, chairs and jars floated past as she fell.

Crash!

As her eyes adjusted to the light, she noticed the nimble rabbit go into a hallway with many doors.

The mad hatter's tea party:

Cautiously Alice stepped into a room full of pandemonium. In front of Alice's lay the Mad Hatter—a crazy man who makes hats. At this moment he was having a terrific tea party with his friend, a door mouse. This incredible duo were conducting and dancing with teapots. Spying between the magenta curtains, Alice noticed the couple celebrating an unbirthday; it is a day that isn't your birthday.

The trial

With a crash and a boom, the Queen stormed into the room. Hastily the Queen in her fiery mood brought in the witnesses. Chaos and confusion, came the witnesses each saying the same as the next: nothing. More havoc and mayhem, built up a fire inside the Queen until she could hold it no longer
